

Please do not repeal the ban on cross-ownership. The public interest, and my interests as a citizen who believes in the free market, will not be served.

The free market of ideas is restricted when a few entities, corporations, individuals, or whatever, own too great a percentage of the media in which ideas are communicated. Although there is some minor effect on the business of media companies, it is not the profitability of a few mega-corporations which should be the government's first priority. Rather, the public interest, the free market of ideas, should be the priority. The FCC cannot tread this path without grave consequences to our democracy. To repeal cross-ownership ban would be another in a series of traitorous attempts to restrict the information considered by Americans in a free democracy. I would appreciate your reasoned response.
